At one of the last press conferences of the American ufologist Cooper, journalists asked him the question: “Why weren’t you killed yourself?” “If they touch me, then everyone who heard my speech will know that everything I told is true ...” the ufologist replied.

On the night of November 5, 2001, Cooper’s ranch was surrounded by police. The official reason given on the record was complaints from local residents that Cooper threatened them with a gun and intimidated them. The rancher warned the police that “those who crossed his border would be shot dead on the spot.” Several shots rang out. The American ufologist fired twice and was immediately shot dead. What was Cooper trying to tell people? Why was he mercilessly shot at night on his ranch? William Cooper was not the first person to die because of attempts to talk about the “conspiracy of silence” that surrounded everything related to the treaty between aliens and American presidents. “The incomparable Marilyn Monroe” — the star of American cinema, the mistress of first President John F. Kennedy, and then his brother, Minister of Justice Robert, died after coming into contact with the mystery that surrounded the aliens. According to journalist Andrei Volkov, during one of his secret meetings, the president inadvertently shared with his beloved the secret of a UFO visit that was carefully hidden from everyone. The actress remembered this episode after another scandal with Robert Kennedy on August 3, 1962. Marilyn achieved a meeting with R. Kennedy, made him a stormy scene, threatening that the next day she would convene a press conference and tell “everything” to reporters. There was no next day, at least for the film star. On the morning of August 4, she was found dead in her home. The official version is suicide. But none of the investigators and knowledgeable journalists could explain where the bruise in the pelvic area appeared on Marilyn’s body as if someone was pressing her to the bed with his knee while another injected her with a lethal injection. Though related people have admitted observing three-toed feet traces in the nearby area. The UFO mystery existed, but it was so overwhelming that people who became familiar with it in detail, as a rule, were “numb”. For example, one of the slogans of Jimmy Carter’s election campaign was the disclosure of the mystery of UFOs. But, having become president of the United States and learning about it, Carter immediately forgot about his promise. Some proponents of conspiracy theories were bringing forward a proposal that officials arrived at an agreement with aliens for an exchange of some kind. Yet, rumours spread of lizardmen that not only allegedly shaped the culture of several societies but live among us today. What alarms some cynics is the corresponding toll of disappearing people. But for what cause?
